

REVIEW DR. JAY MILLER – THE WINE ADVOCATE – SETIEMBRE 2009

Argentina Values Rock

The numbers don't lie. Argentina is having a record year in 2009 exporting their wines to the United States. It is estimated that approximately 35% of Argentina's total production comes to the USA. Certainly a major factor is price. With the USA as well as much of the world still in a major recession, consumers are migrating to the values. They aren't drinking less, just less expensively. Moreover, the only major currency that the US dollar has gained strength against in 2009 is the Argentine peso. Argentina also has an inherent advantage over most other producers because of their inexpensive land and cheap labor. The cost of producing a bottle of wine in Argentina is about one-fourth of what it costs in California. In this comprehensive look at Argentina's value wines, I have recommended 253 wines under $25, and rated 87 points or higher.

In my tastings, about half of the recommended wines are Malbecs leaving the "other" category in the dust (others include all the various white wines, and reds from Bonarda and Syrah) with Cabernet Sauvignon in a distant second place. This is not surprising given the affinity of Mendoza's terroir to excel with Malbec. To say that it is a marriage made in heaven is not overstating the case. There is simply no other place on the planet where Malbec does so well. Will it become the next Merlot? It's simply too soon to say. Unlike Merlot, which seems to grow everywhere, the only place where Malbec is commercially viable on a large scale is in Argentina. I have tasted some very fine Malbecs in Washington, but there will never be enough quantity and the price will never be low enough to make it a competitor. The one risk is if Argentina starts over-producing (as has happened in Australia with Shiraz). Up to now, the lesser quality Malbecs have been consumed at home in Argentina where per capita consumption is triple that of consumers in the USA. That means that the quality level at which Argentina begins to export is remarkably high (no Yellow Tail for example). If that should change and more mediocre wine begins to flood in, the outlook could change. As of today, that scenario does not appear to be happening.

In terms of vintages, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008 are all, at least, very good. Argentina with its high dessert climate and guaranteed water supply is much like Washington in that weather is rarely an issue, so vintages tend to be very consistent from one year to the next.
